

Moshe Levy Farklebar 3.0:

Over the course of the 2016 spring/summer riding season, I was tasked with testing multiple electronic gadgets together simultaneously, including iPhone apps, multiple action cameras and a radar detector. Organizing this motley collection became easy with the addition of the Farklebar 3.0, which is essentially a 15.75" long x 0.38" high x 0.75" wide machined aluminum bar, powdercoated in a non-reflective matte black finish. It features 11 threaded holes to accept typical RAM-ball mounts, from either above or below the bar, allowing for a high degree of customization in gadget placement and orientation. The final result is orderly and professional. The bare Farklebar 3.0 has an MSRP of $37.00 plus any applicable mounts. farklebar.com overlayer for surviving sudden cold snaps. The American-made Ultra-light Rain Pants have an MSRP of $87.00 with zipper pulls included. aerostich.com.

Aerostich Ultralight Rain Pants:

BMW Function Sunglasses:

The Function glasses arrive in a carrying case with three separate pairs of lenses: a semi-mirrored, scratchproof dark gray, a high-contrast, anti-mist coated brown and an anti-reflective, scratchproof clear. The lenses swap within seconds. Dark gray is my favorite pair, since they offer 100% protection against UV-A/B/C and meet CE safety requirements. The featherweight black plastic frame (0.9 oz. including lenses) is accented with anthracite rubber inserts, and offers contemporary styling. Comfort is superb

Aerostich Ultralight Rain Pants:

These are the perfect rain overpants for riders who like to pack small. In this case, an integrated pocket measuring only 5" wide x4" tall x1.5" deep contains the three-layer nylon waterproof pants, which pack back "into themselves" when not in use. The boot openings via seam-sealed waterproof zippers are large enough to step into with bulky ADV boots on, and the elastic drawstring waist and waterproof fly make stopping and undressing just as easy. The pants provide a degree of windproofing as well, making them a valuable emergency thanks to the snug-fitting design, soft nose pads, and short arms which fit into every helmet I own without interference. The Chinese-made Function glasses have an MSRP of $139.00. bmwmotorcycles.com

Russell Evans Harley-Davidson Flatwood Boots

The new Flatwood, from Harley-Davidson, is a full-grain leather, 8-inch, upper-calf boot that slips on easily with its YKK locking zipper for easy entry. It laces up to a nice, snug fit that is immediately comfortable, thanks to the mesh lining. The extra-wide toe box adds breathing room right where it is needed, so it doesn't feel like your foot is jammed. The non-slip rubber outsole is great on slick and oily surfaces. Adorned with silver H-D nameplates across the toe, on the heel and shaft, these comfortable boots can be worn with pant legs tucked or untucked. Men's sizes: 7-13. Colors: Black, Stone. MSRP: $180. harley-davidsonfootwear.com

Joe Michaud Protective Eye Wear

After my cataract surgery, my distance vision was near perfect. However, that left my close-up vision lacking. We've all been impacted by bugs, pebbles, or been bead-blasted by sand, and I like eye protection even in a full helmet; but cramming expensive frames into a helmet can quickly deform them. There are many safety glasses that have small, "cheater" lens inserts for close-up clarity in viewing gauge clusters, GPS, cell phones, maps, etc. I researched my correct diopter correction from its off-the-shelf display, then ordered these straight-stem bifocal "riding" glasses from Aerostich in clear polycarbonate for $24.00. Nicely windproof, too. Item #1071 at aerostich.com.
